

HISTORY

Built by the fashionable architect John Verge, Elizabeth Bay House is an example of colonial architecture in a magnificent setting overlooking Sydney Harbour. Occupied by the Colonial Secretary, Alexander Macleay, and his family between 1839 and 1845, it was known as the 'finest house in the colony'. The house has been elegantly furnished to the Macleay period and is an excellent venue for business events, intimate dinners, cocktail parties, wedding ceremonies and receptions, and film and photography.

HALL & SALOON

The saloon features a majestic domed ceiling and an elegant cantilevered staircase, providing an atmospheric space for a sit down dinner for up to 40 guests, or a cocktail party or wedding ceremony for up to 100 guests. While visiting the house, guests have the opportunity to experience the unique surroundings by viewing the period exhibition rooms with their exquisite 19th-century furnishings. Some of the exhibition rooms available for viewing include the dining room, drawing room, library and bedrooms.

DINING ROOM

The Dining Room seats up to 24 guests at an antique mahogany table. An original working fireplace, high ceilings and period furnishings add to the unique atmosphere. The adjoining sandstone verandah with sweeping views of Sydney Harbour is the ideal setting for pre-dinner drinks. The cellar, with its vaulted and beamed ceilings, sandstone walls and floors, is the perfect space in which to serve dessert by candlelight.
